One in three workers think that the time spent in their last training session probably would have been better spent elsewhere

This, according to a survey by Hudson, a staffing and consulting services company, also states that among these workers

think the training was a complete waste of their time

Clearly, classroom training and traditional approaches to skill development may not be as effective as we think. Progressive small and medium-sized businesses are beginning to look in-house for supervisors and managers who can deliver on the job coaching, mentoring and on-site, on-demand training.
